"Walt a moment. You said someting about guing away, didn't you?"

"I think I did."
"Why don't you go to her first and eil her all that you have told me?
Why don't you take her with you?
Eh? Why don't you?"

Harvard laughed a oud and bitterly.

"Ask her to go away with a felon? As kher to become the wife of a man with a price on his head?" he demanded

"But you are not guilty. You are not a felon."

"I wil, be one—when I have finished with Rushton."

"You can put him and your vengeance against him aside if you win her, Bing." "I don't want to win her. I wouldn't marry her if she were the last woman on earth—and because of the very rea-son why I would not do that, neither will I put aside the sentence I have passed upon Rodney Rushton."

ETNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS. Singham Harvard, a young bank-teller s wrongly accused of the theft of a vast aum from the institution that employs aim, and inrough the persecution of a solice official named Rushton, is forced innowledge of the baffing character whom the police are pursuins.

After an unusually turilling escape from the police the Night Wind wounded and collisions, by a trick of fate finds his way to the house occupied by Lady Kate. He to take in and cared for and his hiding place kept secret. Lieutenam Rushion, hinroard's implacable foe, believes that his quarry was drowned.

"Well, what of it? Suppose he did?"

"I can't stay here forever, Tom. You know that."

"All the same, you are here now, and you can't go outside just now. So just forget all about those cops across the street and tell me what it is that you want me to do for you. We won't think about the manner of your going until the time comes for you to go."

"So be it. A little while ago, when I mentioned that night at Chester's house, at the time the charge of their was first nade against me, I purposely omitted one circumstance. Tom."

"All right. Let's hear about it."

"A young woman, Tom, a very beautiful woman, and a thoroughly good woman, too, But a sadly misplaced one. I want you to save her from herself."

There was no pretense in the stare of unfeigned astonishment which Thomas Clancy bestowed upon his friend. At last he said:

"That is a pretty big proposition, isn't it?"

"Perhaps so. I cannot do it for myself; therefore you must do it for me, "Between you and me, Bins, I think when I have found him and finished with him—hen—I shall leave the country for good and all."
